

You're working hard on your Adobe project but do you have a system for remembering your flash drive for the next day?

Chances are you don't so how about this?

During the last 10 minutes of class, save your work and then eject your flash drive.

Then put it in something bigger, like a zip lock bag so you can see it easier in your book bag when you look for it the next day.

This will keep you working with less stress. Problem solved!
